Then colleagues of the first level customer service described their daily tasks then leaders of CSS and CES (servers, applications, databases) exposed the responsibility of their department. At the end the young professionals were able to get acquainted with the work and communication processes of each service unit under real life circumstances.

After the visit the participants gathered a lot of motivation and experience, they recognized that practical skills are as important as theoretical knowledge and nowadays speaking at least one, or two foreign languages is a must for getting a great job.
